gregation and of others, was well-known, and many were the gifts which found their way to struggling missionaries through her generous hands. The children of Saint Xavier's School for the poor, which is attached to the Convent and High School, Kodaikanal, were specially favoured by Mother Augustine, whom they called "Big-hearted Mother Augustine."

Not only were the poor of the surrounding village her sympathetic charity, many of the poor, isolated missions in South India and Ceylon found in her a fairy Godmother.

To her many natural gifts of mind and heart, Reverend Mother Augustine added a deep spirituality which kept her ever cheerful and confident in the midst of difficulties and suffering. The undaunted courage with which she carried on her work at Kodaikanal, though oppressed with a painful and serious illness for many years, is proof of her wonderful faith and trust in God. Her ready sympathy and unvarying courtesy, her keen spontaneous interest in even the smallest details of the lives of those around her, her strong resignation, gave to her bearing an irresistible charm that led many to seek peace where she so manifestly found it, in the Faith of Christ.

The passing of Reverend Mother Augustine will be felt not only by her Order, but also by a wide circle of friends and past pupils, to whom she endeared herself as a model religious teacher, friend and mother.
