CITY FIRE OUTBREAK

At about 2 o'clock to-day the City Fire Brigade was summoned to the millinery shop of Eve Roche's St. (owned by Misses Casey), to quell an outbreak of fire. It was found that a quantity of silken goods, underwear, etc., in one corner of the shop had become ignited, but the Brigade got the blaze under control in a comparatively short time. The damage done is not very extensive.

enthusiasm waned. Gaps of days and weeks occurred here and there, and some time in September I gave the whole business up as a bad job, and left my Cinin Lae just as Schubert (was it?) left that famous symphony of his. I once knew a man who jotted down each day's newspaper headings in the appropriate space in his diary. After the passage of years they read like the chapter titles of some little-known history book.

What events will we note in our diaries for 1945? How impenetrable are the mists of the future! Will all our writings be a catalogue of blood and disaster and woe, or will we write some day in the 365 before us the words a suffering world longs to hear—"Peace Declared?" Let us hope so.

SOME "DONT'S."

Now to conclude, here is a list of resolutions for that one maid in Limerick, to whom they apply. She can select the one she thinks most applicable:—

- Don't say 'say'!
- Don't say 'see'!
- Don't say 'listen'!
- And don't say 'Gee'!
- Don't powder your nose
- In the public gaze,
- Don't polish your nails
- In the public ways.
- And don't display
- Such a length of limb,
- Don't dress in the street,
- As if going to swim.
- Don't talk so much
- About 'him' and 'his,'
- Don't say so often
- 'I'll say it is.'
- And don't say 'dearie,'
- And don't chew gum—
- And then I'll say
- 'The millennium's come.'
