There are three main phases of pruning in the lifetime of a tree: the young stage, the mature stage, and the old stage.

Pruning is necessary to encourage strong branches to develop in the right places, and thinning out the old and diseased wood.

FIRST PRUNING.

The first pruning should be done in the first spring after planting, and should consist of cutting out the main stem and the lower branches.

MATURE STAGE.

After about five to seven years of this pruning, the tree has a well-developed structure and should be pruned to maintain its shape.
