the purpose at all prices on goods in windows. Is it an honor to let the public infinitely what is to be the retail charges upon? Or is it a device to mislead and entice them into under false pretence? The latter be the answer seems manifestly obvious and ought to be punished accordingly. If the existing an important matter of this kind is as loose and content as it appears an early opportunity taken to have it amended.

According to the Counsel consulted in the Irish Press, there is "no absolutely direct" governing the matter. Most people, we think, will agree that it should be. The law in shops requires amendment in several respects and obviously one of them is that all goods displayed in windows should have to them the prices they are offered. Otherwise it would be absurd to make a rule unless steps were taken to ensure that so marked were the ones to be charged.
