

Poles.

Both arguments—those of the Government and those of the Opposition—will be given, and there will be stories of arrests; of bandits, of dramatic disappearances, and of political unrest that often threatens to become open civil war. The views of the Polish peasant who has watched in bewilderment as the frontiers of his country have been slashed and extended, will be aired in full.

“The Irish Press” was the first Irish newspaper to send a reporter to Central Europe since 1939. During his travels Bestic, lived among the people and noted their reactions to victory and defeat. These will form the background to his articles, which will feature also his personal experiences on a European journey of several thousand miles.
