rtaxed and huge numbers had remain in the open all night. ad, too, was getting scarce and a ny loaf rose to 3d.

as early as 6 o'clock on the sday morning, after a fitful p, Father Mathew again aped in front of Mr. Dunbar's ce to resume his wonderful k, which he kept up until he for Cork at 5 o'clock that after- on. It appears that during this it to Limerick he pledged 0,000 men and women, many ousands of whom had come from ighbouring counties.

n a subsequent visit to Limerick enrolled 30,000. On this occasion was entertained to a banquet at ich nearly 200 persons sat down, uding William Smith O'Brien, e speech of the night, after that he Apostle, we are told, "was t of the learned and eloquent an Col. Parish Priest of New- stle West, a staunch supporter of e cause and a warm friend of e Father Mathew."

PATHETIC CHAPTER.

A singularly interesting if some- at pathetic chapter of Father Augustine's great book is that which its how Father Mathew was inated Bishop of Cork but iled to secure the mitre. Most y. Dr. Murphy, Bishop of Cork, ed on April 1st, 1847. The parish irts of the diocese met on the h for the purpose of nominating s successor. Proceeding accord- g to the custom of the time—and hich lasted up to some years ago they elected three persons as gnus (worthy) dignior (more orthy) and dignissimus (most orthy). Father Mathew was med dignissimus, and as a eneral rule the one so placed was osen by the Pope. The election as presided over by his Grace the rchbishop of Cashel, Most Rev. r. Slattery, "and the report that e and his suffragans sent to Rome e to the merits of the candidates aturally influenced the decision." he fact that he was the choice of e prominent ecclesiastics of his wn diocese gave Father Mathew ent satisfaction, not in any per- onal sense but because "he elieved that the cause which he ad so deeply at heart would be erved by his elevation to the itre."

Meanwhile, Father Mathew had eard something that had dis- ucted him, "not so much on his wn account as because of the work e had at heart." In a letter on the ublic in Rome he mentioned that a prelate who was my warmest patron has, from an infirmity of mper, become prejudiced against e." In any case, he was passed ver by the Pope, who appointed irstead the candidate placed ighior. His disappointment was ot due to any personal ambition or the high office but for fear it ould cause "a reaction in the ublic mind by producing an im- ession amongst the people that he Holy See disapproved of the mperance movement."

Father Mathew, of course, took his reverse in the spirit of humility ne would expect from him. Nor ad he any jealous feelings owards his rival who was chosen n his stead. He invited the bishop lect to a "family dinner," where, t is stressed, Father Mathew ap- eared "in the bright light of one who is more anxious to secure the afety of a cause than to attain the onour of a See."

A GREAT BOOK.

"In every chapter and almost in every page of Father Augustine's book, "Footprints of Father Mathew," there is something one would like to quote if space per- mitted. This is truly a great work hat deserves to be very widely ead. Its chief value, as Rev. Father James, O.F.M.Cap., says in a foreword, "lies precisely in the act that it is no mere mechanical ecord of successive and unrelated vents but a genuine interpretation herein, without obtruding himself, Father Augustine allows his subject o express himself not only in action ut in words, and not only in words of public utterance but in words of intimate correspondence."

Suffered from Rheumatism for some years

True experience is well worth passing on, and we are obliged to Mr. L. J. B. for the following extracts from an interesting letter: "I have been a sufferer from rheumatism for some years, but I have had it really badly during the recent autumn and onwards and could only walk slowly as the right leg was almost crippled... in desperation I turned to Fynnon Salt, and I am now on the second tin. The remedy has had a definite effect. I can walk normally, and free of pain. It has cheered me too and I now whistle at my
