THE PRICE OF COAL

WHY IS IT SO HIGH IN LIMERICK?

Why is coal so dear in Limerick? That question is being asked on all sides, writes a Limerick Leader reporter.

Various reasons are put forward to Housekeepers, it was stated, who explain, if not justify, the high price had heard of the probability of the prevailing here for coal, including strike, had laid in a reserve over ervance may, however, British coal. It is stated, for the week-end so that there was no instance, that the long sea route, real fear to-day of an immediate involving high freightage charges, shortage. work was necessary on together with antiquated methods tillage and harvesting for the discharge of vessels at the port, are the chief causes operating to prevent coal being retailed at a price comparable to that obtaining elsewhere.

> Yet the public, judging by their criticisms, do not seem to be impressed by the explanations given.

The price of coal in Limerick is now £8 5s. per ton. In Kilrush it is £7 5s, per ton.

A Waterford importer has sold a quantity of coal to an educational establishment near Limerick at was that the strike would last for £68s, per ton. This coal was delivered some time. by lorry. In fact, coal is passing through Limerick in lerries every day from Cork and Waterford to centres that should, in the ordinary way, be served from Limerick, but Limerick's price is not competitive

It was announced at a meeting of Cork Fishery Board on Saturday that over 800 salmon were caught in Cork during the first week of the season.

BAD FOR CORK

BAKERS ON STRIKE

bakery firms in Cork struck work this morning, and the city is to-day facing a breadless period as far as bakery bread is concerned.

The bakers' dispute arose over the refusal of the men's Union to accept the terms of the Labour Court award with regard to time service. Officials of the Master Bakers' Association stated to-day that they had received a communication from the Labour Court that the leaders had contacted the headquarters of the men's union, but had stated that the strike was unofficial.
