Things That Matter

Flies are very small things in themselves but they are great exceedingly big in potential danger. They are a grave menace to public and private health by constantly spreading disease and carrying infection from place to place. It has been said, indeed, that they are more destructive of human life than even the most

These winged instrument: of mischief and havoe, therefore, should be fought in every possible way. If allowed to go Bodget altogether unchecked they would multiply to alarming numbers and become one of the greatest enemies of mankind." Swat that fly " was a much-used slogan in this country a good many years ago and it is an exhortation that deserves to be acted and upon to the fullest extent by all our people.

In this connection the public Health Department of decision recently. During the May heat wave it sent men out equipped with D.D.T. and other insecticides to treat with these preparations all those places within the Borough that were likely to sta- be breeding grounds for flies.

Even if this wise scheme achieved only a very small Sisters of Mer- proportion of the success it was expected to yield, it would gression. It can safely be sources of danger, such as sewers dumps, disused quarries and so on. At the same time individuals can and should play a big part in keeping down the fly menace, and every household should in this respect be a veritable battle ground.

It is amazing how indifferent some people can be to the disgusting spectacle of flies creeping even over what they are going to eat. Those who see nothing nauseating in this sort of contamination of their food not only lack knowMOST REV. DR..
