DAIL EIREANN

And Peace Treaty.

Mrs O'Callaghan's Speech.

At the Dail Session on Tuesday, Mrs O'Callaghan, Limerick, said she rose to support the motion for rejection, and let anybody question her right she wanted it to be understood she had the clearest right. Since she had come to Dublin for the session she had been told her husband was never a Republican. She challenged any person in the Dail to deny her husband's devotion to the Republic. Her husband sealed that devotion with his blood, and she asked the gentlemen who said they were Republicans to leave her husband's name out of the matter (hear, hear). Her views had always been well known in Limerick to the people of Limerick who voted her deputy to the Dail after her husband's death. She protested against the suggestion that no woman in the Dail would vote merely because she was a Republican, but because of deep personal loss. The women of the Dail were women of character, and would vote for principle—not for expediency (hear, hear). For herself, since her husband she had been a separatist. She wanted Ireland to be separated from the British Empire, and she assured them her life in Limerick, outstanding in the murder of her husband last March, had not converted her to the status in the British Empire. It hurt her to have to vote against the Minister for Foreign Affairs. He was a friend of her husband, but in this matter she was determined to show no devotion either to leader or party. This was a matter purely of principle and conscience—a matter of right and wrong. From the time she had to vote she had no hesitation in admitting that the delegates had full powers to go and conclude a Treaty, but she understood they were to submit the final draft to the Cabinet and President before signing. The delegates were—although she did not like to use the word—bluffed by threats of violence, and she had no reason to believe that some of the delegates supporters were trying to use the same bluff there. (Hear, hear.) She still remained a separatist and her objection to the Treaty was on principle. The Treaty would put Ireland definitely into the British Empire, and she asked what had all the hundreds of years of struggle been for? On the question of the oath she had raised the matter, and ever since every legal man in that assembly had been giving her advice, and explaining it to her. She still failed to see how in swearing the oath of allegiance to the British State she could avoid King George. She could not do that, because he is in the Constitution. Even if she found the terms of the Treaty satisfactory and consistent with national honour, the joy of the British Press would have made her suspicious. She still had her doubts of the splendid action of England in settling her quarrels with Ireland. If those statements were all that the papers pretended it might be an admirable thing. But this Treaty would not be a settlement, and would not make for peace, because it did not recognize the sovereign independent status of Ireland, and it was a mean thing to patch up the rottenness of the Empire by a pretended gift of freedom to Ireland. It was more than mean—it was a crime, for it left England's hands free for glass like Egypt and India—(hear, hear)—in the name, she supposed, of our common civilization. Those who knew her and her story would know what little happiness she felt against the solemn murderers of her husband. They walked the streets of Limerick for weeks, and she never asked, as she could have done, to have that murder revealed by Irish Republican boys; but she did feel bitter towards all those who had husband and son for and invited for, and for which she lost her happiness, was going to be voted away by the young soldiers in whom he had such hope. Her husband lay in Limerick in the Republican Plot, and although the Deputies of An Dail might vote in favour of the British Empire, that plot could not be touched. When they buried was Republican ground, and she defied them to violate it. (Applause.) They were making history that day, and their decision would have far-reaching effects, and if they were wrong, as she thought, she had made up their minds as to what she had to do. Let them stand for principle and against the Treaty. (Applause.)

PEEPS INTO THE PAST.

In the Limerick Chronicle of April and May, 1822, we find the following:—

THE POTATO CROP.

Lord Curragh has offered a premium of twenty pounds to the first person who shall bring a quantity of potatoes, not less than one hundred tons, by canal and river Shannon to Limerick, and to the second who shall convey a like quantity by land to Limerick, a premium of ten pounds.

A memorial has been forwarded by the magistrates of the County Kerry to the Lord Lieutenant, praying his Excellency would be pleased to direct such a premium to be taken by encouraging the importation of potatoes into this part of the country as they are a staple food of the country, and afford a sufficiency of seed potatoes for the next year.

DESTRUCTIVE STORM.

Two large sailing boats, value £200, the property of Mr George Parker, of this city, were totally wrecked at Kibaha on Saturday night in the storm. Crew saved.

DIRT.

On Thursday, at Rathkeale, the Rev Fr Lee, P.P. of Rathkeale, a gentleman whose death is very much regretted by all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance.

RELIEF MEASURES.

We hear Mr Owen is preparing the details of practical measures, which are now likely to meet the concurrence of all parties, for the relief of the present labour and the poor of this country, and that he expects soon to have the plan ready to submit to the Government.

THE WINDOW TAX.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer intends to reduce the Window Tax on all houses letting lodgings to one shilling per window. This is supposed to be the only modification.

HIGH PRICE OF POTATOES.

At a meeting of the citizens at large held yesterday at the Commercial Buildings, in consequence of a requisition from the Right Worshipful the Mayor, to consider the expediency of measures being adopted for alleviating the inconvenience which the poor classes of this city at present labour under, in consequence of the high price of potatoes, the Mayor of Limerick in the chair, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:—Proposed by the Lord Bishop, seconded by Robert Mansell, Esq.—Resolved, That a Committee be appointed to select and receive subscriptions for the purchase of potatoes, and to distribute the same among the poor of the city, following the severity of potatoes, and to apply the same in such a manner as they shall deem expedient.—The following Committee were then appointed:—The Mayor, Lord Viscount Gort, Michael Davitt, Lord Bishop of Limerick, Rev Dr. Tuohy, Bolton Waller, Robert Mansell, Hon John Massey, William and Thomas Roche, Drury O'Grady, Alderman Watson, Alderman G. Webb, Alderman Ralph Westropp, Alderman Sir G. Barrett, A. Corbett, D. F. G.
