TIPPERARY DRAPERY STRIKE Case for the Assistants A Tipperary correspondent writes:—Many months ago demands were made on the various firms in town to set up a minimum rate of wages for the assistants and clerks, but owing to circumstances over which some of us had no control, it was thought inadvisable to have the matter pressed beyond requesting the employers to enter into negotiations.

And the fight has recommenced. To-day eight of the principal shops are up against it. In this case happens to be the grim determination of a large number of strikers—this large and respectable part of the community of Tipperary to which the fight has been waged with vigour. The fight has been waged with vigour since it commenced and, like the flaming torrent, fed by many a rivulet on its ocean bank course over rocks and barriers, has gathered force and intensity as it carries the banner of defiance to the gates of victory. On the way and self-reliance we remember we have nothing to lose but our chains, and we have a world to gain.
