armamamana.

Our seefal monthly contemporary shows the world importance of the Angla-Irish straggie, and makes is clear that if the Irish rate scattered throughout five Continants is in a state of resentment the great nations of the earsh will not find their interests sufficiently soonra to lay aside the fatiguing weight of their arms.

The Great Fowers are all growing weary undery ine burden of heavy taxation and other troublas, and it is by no means unlikely that they ordenaly desirs the adoption of some means by which the race of armamsate could be at least slowed down somewhat, and they fully realise that no settlement in Ireland manus no international disarmaniene.

Irstand and she Anglo-Irlah Peace Oonfarence, therefore, play an extremely important park in insernational relationships and worldpolitics at the present moment.

"As she "Irish Rusary " puts 19, "the connotember a fallars to bring about a reduction el armsmente are casy to forecast. The competition in naval construction would be faverishly parapad all the war point is reached. Brissin and America, vying for sea power, would drif: into confilos at an early date." The problem of her food supply during such ssirnggie has made this subjest of disarmament a visal one for Biltain.

Largely fed by America, our contemporary says, " she wissly sees that an enemy who could nee the storvation we pon against her is terribly formidable, and she well perceives that triandship is a safer policy than rivalry. But the friandship of America cannot be raliably obtained sill the Iciah are conclined." There can be no doubs that there fists have contributed largely to the calling of a brace in Irsiand and she holding of an Irich Peace Don-(srenog.
